The stars were out in full force on David Geffen's $300million yacht last week, which played host to the likes of Oprah Winfrey, Diane Sawyer, and Gayle King.

Geffen's boat was anchored off the luxurious Verdura Resort in Sicily, where Google's exclusive three-day summer camp is held every year.

The annual event is held at the $1,770-a-night resort, but it was Geffen's 454-foot boat where a slew of celebrities decided to play instead.

Geffen posted pictures of his famous crew's week together in Italy, where he was also joined by designer Diane Von Furstenberg, actress Julianna Margulies, and Disney CEO Bob Iger.

The music mogul posted a picture on Instagram of the group smiling on his yacht Rising Sun last week, happily dropping their famous names in the caption.

'Bob Iger, Willow, Gayle, Oprah, Diane, Dasha Zhukova, DVF. A great week in Sicily,' he wrote.

They stars all smiled big for the camera, including Russian businesswoman Zhukova, whose divorce to Roman Abramovich was announced just days later.

Geffen also posted a photo of him, Zhukova, and oil heir Michael Hess relaxing in their swimsuits.

His star-studded crew was also snapped enjoying a casual meal at Lo Scoglio.

Geffen was joined for lunch by Von Furstenberg and her husband Barry Diller, Oprah, Sawyer, King, and Margulies and her husband Keith Lieberthal.

An umbrella-dotted beach could be seen in the background as everyone except Geffen shielded their famous faces with sunglasses.

The businessman remarked in the caption that it was a 'great meal'.

Gayle also posted a picture of the group having a blast in Italy, sharing a snap of a hike she took with Oprah, Von Furstenberg, Diller, and Sawyer.

'The hiking version of words with friends in Italy! We all survived,' she wrote in the caption.

It seems likely that Geffen's celebrity gang got together during Google's lavish 'top secret' summer camp in Italy.

The annual event is held at the $1,770-a-night Verdura Resort on the island of Sicily by Google's billionaire co-founders Larry Page and Sergey Brin.

This year's event was held just days before the company made headlines after Google engineer James Damore's memo about women being less biologically suited for some jobs in tech went viral.

Every year Page and Brin invite a select few of the world's wealthiest leaders in business, tech, sports, and entertainment to spend three days at the retreat.

Mornings at the resort are dedicated to discussions ranging from human rights to the internet, while afternoons and nights are filled with lavish dinners and performances.

There are days trips around the coast, visits to wineries and local tourist spots, as well as spa treatments.

On the last night of the camp, Google spends more than $80,000 renting the massive 2,500-year-old Valley of the Temples ruins for a spectacular concert and sit-down dinner for 300 people - which this year featured Elton John and Lenny Kravitz.

It was discovered this year that Prince Harry attended the camp, along with actress Emma Watson.

And although guests are forbidden from publicizing the event on social media, the Instagram-loving Geffen couldn't help himself.

Just a day before posting pictures of his celebrity-filled yacht, Geffen shared a snap with Golden State Warriors player Kevin Durant.

In the caption Geffen indicated that he was attending Google camp in Sicily.

This is hardly the first time Geffen's yacht has been a temporary home for his famous friends.

In March the music mogul hosted Barack Obama and Michelle Obama along with Bruce Springsteen, Tom Hanks, and Oprah for a trip through the French Polynesia.

Springsteen and Hanks are regular guests on the Rising Sun, while Mariah Carey, James Packer, Leonardo di Caprio and Steven Spielberg have also graced its deck.
